

GLOBAL MEDIA STUDENT NETWORK

An invitation for your students to participate in the pilot launch of Global Media Student Network this summer (free).

WHAT IT IS

A global network of students from around the world engaging in conversations about media, communication, culture, and digital trends in English within a comfortable, structured, and safe online environment.

WHY IT MATTERS

English is the lingua franca - the shared language used across the industry in international collaboration, digital platforms, marketing, entertainment and journalism.

Having strong English proficiency can open more doors and accelerate students' careers in global media, communications, and journalism.

BENEFITS

- Improve English fluency and gain confidence expressing ideas and opinions on industry-related topics.
- Develop greater cross-cultural understanding through conversations with students from around the world.
- Build professional and personal connections beyond their school and country.

WHO IT'S FOR

University students in: communications, journalism, PR, Advertising, Marketing, Digital Media, Broadcasting; English level proficiency - Intermediate and above

HOW IT WORKS

- An internationally diverse group of students, matched by English proficiency level, meets virtually outside of classroom hours.
- Small-group sessions (4-6 students) and one-on-one conversations are structured to encourage equal participation and effective fluency-building.
- Industry-related discussion topics are provided prior to each session.
- Guest speakers may include U.S.-based media and communications professionals.

PARTNERSHIP DETAILS

Program is turnkey. connect-ED manages all coordination, scheduling, facilitation, and student matching.

This is a free pilot program during summer to test network. If interested, in fall session, pricing is based on number of students participating.
